USDOJ-

The final judgment in the Microsoft case as currently written seriously lacks an effective enforcement mechanism. The solution given, a Technical Committee with investigative powers, would only continue the cycle of litigation that favors Microsoft's massive legal resources.

The public's interest will also be forced into the legal system again when violations continue, thus wasting the much exhausted resources of the government and private sector. A final judgment must be decisive and strictly and easily enforceable. Such a judgment would not only be more effective, but would save more money for the taxpayer in the future. The current judgment does not do this and I do NOT support it.
